In 2019, I embarked on a journey back to Scotland, the country of my birth. I had been living in New Zealand for the past 10 years, but I always longed to return to the land of my ancestors.

This time, I was determined to go further and farther, to discover the hidden gems that most tourists never see. I wanted to experience the real Scotland, the Scotland that is off the beaten track.

I started my journey in Edinburgh, the vibrant capital city. I spent a few days exploring the iconic castle, the Royal Mile, and the many other historical sites. But I was eager to get out of the city and explore the rest of the country.

My first stop was the Highlands, a region of stunning natural beauty. I hiked through the rolling hills, marvelled at the towering mountains, and took in the breathtaking views of the lochs. I also visited some of the region's most famous landmarks, such as Loch Ness and Glencoe.

Next, I headed to the Isle of Skye, which is often called the "Jewel of Scotland." I was immediately captivated by the island's rugged coastline, its crystal-clear waters, and its towering cliffs. I spent a few days hiking, swimming, and exploring the island's many hidden coves.

My journey continued to the Outer Hebrides, a chain of islands off the west coast of Scotland. I visited the islands of Lewis and Harris, which are known for their beautiful beaches, their dramatic landscapes, and their rich Gaelic culture.

I also took a ferry to the remote island of St Kilda, which is home to a UNESCO World Heritage Site. St Kilda is a truly unique place, with its towering cliffs, its seabird colonies, and its abandoned village.

My journey through Scotland was an unforgettable experience. I discovered a country of stunning natural beauty, rich history, and warm hospitality. I also discovered a part of myself that I never knew existed. I am proud to be a Kiwi lass, but I am also proud to be Scottish.

If you are planning a trip to Scotland, I encourage you to go further and farther. Get off the beaten track and discover the country's hidden gems. You won't be disappointed.

Here are some tips for planning your own trip to Scotland:

- Rent a car. This will give you the freedom to explore the country at your own pace.
- Book your accommodation in advance, especially if you are travelling during peak season.
- Pack for all types of weather. Scotland's weather can be unpredictable, so it's important to be prepared for anything.
- Be prepared for some long driving days. Scotland is a large country, and there are often long distances between towns and cities.
- Take your time and enjoy the journey. Scotland is a beautiful country, so don't rush your trip.

I hope you enjoy your trip to Scotland as much as I did!
